How the Glycemic Index Helps You Battle the Bulge

Keeping a close eye on the glycemic index (GI) of foods you eat can help you lose weight and improve your health. The GI ranks carbohydrates by their level of impact on blood glucose levels. Medical experts consider blood sugar levels an important aspect of overall health. The GI is divided into three categories:

- Low: Foods that rate 55 or less on the index.
- Intermediate: Foods that rate between 56 and 69 on the index.
- High: Foods that rate 70 and higher on the index.

Small changes can add up to big results. For example, instead of eating a doughnut, which has a GI of 76, exchange it for a tasty piece of pound cake, which has a GI of 54.

Following are some other surprisingly scrumptious alternatives:

1. Replace soft drinks with soymilk, apple juice or orange juice.
2. Give up rice cakes, which have a GI of 77, and replace them with whole or multi-grain breads, which have a GI of 50. Better yet, opt for low-fat yogurt, which has a GI of 14.
3. Start out the day with delicious muesli, which has a GI of 56, or an ultra-low all-bran cereal, which has a GI of 42, instead of high-GI choices like Weetabix, which has a GI of 77; puffed wheat, which has a GI of 74; or corn flakes, which has a GI of 83.

Five Ways To Be a Force of Calm in a Time of Turmoil

by Scott Ginsberg in Hello, My Name Is Blog ... The Brain of Scott Ginsberg
"If you can keep your head when all about you are losing theirs and blaming it on you ... you'll be a man, my son," wrote British poet laureate Rudyard Kipling in 1895. Kipling and writer Scott Ginsberg are on the same wavelength. Here Ginsberg demonstrates how to turn yourself into a force of calm during a crisis.

Buying Versus Renovating: What's the Right Decision?

Deciding whether to buy a new home or renovate your existing one is no easy task.

There are pros and cons to both options.

However, it boils down to one simple question: What do you want out of it?

If space is the problem and you love your neighborhood, an addition might well be the answer.

A floor plan that no longer works for your family, or outdated kitchens and bathrooms, may point to a renovation.

On the other hand, if you are looking for a better neighborhood, want to be closer to family, and are looking for more amenities, then buying could fit the bill.

For the most part, empty-nesters looking to downsize to a senior-friendly home with like-minded neighbors are buyers, not renovators.

The issue of timing is of utmost importance in making your decision.

An addition, rebuild or major renovation will almost always take more time and be more disruptive than a move.

You can move from the nightmare on 42nd Street to your dream house in less than two months, while a major renovation could take up to a year.

Moving is also generally less costly.

The decision is a wrenching one. Don't expect an easy answer.

Just make sure you're getting what you want and your decision will have been the right one.

Three Ways to Get Your Morning Motor Running

Need a little morning lift without the java jitters?

Following are some surefire ways to help you get going in the morning without that mug of extra-strength espresso:

Get Up and Go: One of the worst mistakes made by most people is to go back to sleep after the alarm goes off. Instead, get up and go as soon as possible. Take a warm shower or set the thermostat to increase in temperature 30 minutes before the alarm goes off. Heat helps get you moving. It takes time for the vagus nerve to fully convey sensory information after a long night of rest, so the sooner you start moving the more alert you will become.

Light Up Your Life: The body is naturally attuned to light, so for a gentle start without stimulants try setting a timer to turn on a light at least 30 minutes before the alarm goes off, or purchase an alarm with a built-in light. It's an easy, yet effective, way to wake up in the morning.

Get a Great Night's Sleep: Without doubt, the best way to wake up refreshed, rested and ready to start the day is to have a great night's sleep.

1. Start by turning down the temperature. A room that is a few degrees cooler than normal helps your body stay in slumber mode.
2. Turn off the TV, radio and lights. Make it as quiet and dark as possible.
3. Set a schedule. Going to bed and getting up at the same time each day help regulate the body's circadian rhythm.

Tips for Getting That Real Estate Deal Done

Obtaining the services of a professional real estate agent is the first step in selling your home. In today's tough economic times, though, every little bit helps. Following are five ways to reduce the risk of last-minute mishaps and get the deal done:

1. Make It Easy to Move: Small things can add up, especially when making a major move. Differentiate your property by offering to pay for secure storage, rental trucks or even a hotel room. Nearly everyone dreads having to move, so making it as easy as possible is a sure way to please even the most difficult buyer.

2. Pay for a Mini-Makeover: If the property is in need of a few repairs or upgrades, seal the deal by including funds, labor or supplies for a mini-makeover. It doesn't have to cost a lot. For example, include a few gift cards and a couple of days of labor, help paint a room or put in new landscaping.

3. Offer Monetary Motivation: Provide an additional incentive to both the buyer and agent by offering a cash bonus for closing by a given date. You might be surprised how well this works, especially when trying to sell a home during the off season or other difficult time.

4. Entice Them With Incentives: Help prospective buyers control costs by including innovative incentives like a home warranty package or energy-efficient upgrades. A home warranty is a great way to provide additional protection against unanticipated expenses, especially when working with first-time homebuyers or others on a limited budget. Other attractive options include energy-efficient upgrades like new LED lighting, on-demand water heaters or new appliances.

5. Rent or Lease Options: Sometimes the property is perfect, but the timing isn't. Instead of letting the entire deal turn sour, sweeten things up with the use of a well-executed lease. Allow the buyers to move in early if they need the home sooner than anticipated, or lease the property back from them if they need to delay a few months after closing. It's a great way to create a win-win situation for everyone.

Ways to Cure an Internet Addiction

Americans are addicted to the Internet. Some 59% of U.S. citizens are Internet users, with individuals averaging 36.5 hours a month online.

However, it has drawbacks. Some of the consequences related to heavy Internet usage can be depression, loss of productivity and scattered thinking.

So how do we control our Internet addiction?

The answer, ironically enough, could rest in downloadable technology from the Internet.

Blogger J. K. Glej, in an American Express open forum, has highlighted some available apps that can help.

You can block time-wasting websites with downloadable SelfControl.

You can also increase your focus with FocusBooster, a time management system with a built-in break every 25 minutes.

You can also try Think, which allows you to hide applications and focus on one task.

Ask the Agent: This Month's Question

Why do you need a real estate agent when you purchase a home?

If you are thinking about purchasing a home, it is wise to hire a real estate agent to help you. It is the seller in a real estate transaction who pays the commission to agents in the property deal, so there is no cost to the buyer.

By hiring an agent, you will also benefit from his or her expertise. The agent will be able to tell you if the property is reasonably priced. After all, unless you have insight into the market, you are taking the word of the listing agent.

A good buyer's agent will be able to tell you both what comparables have sold for recently, and what they expect the property to appraise for. If you are planning on financing the property, the lender will want an appraisal. If the appraisal, which you pay for, comes in significantly lower than the purchase price, and the listing agent is unwilling to move on the price, you get to start the process over on a different property.

Too Many Internet Passwords? Try This Idea

It's everyone's nightmare. You've been "phished," and someone is using your password to access your banking information.

For almost every online activity, you have to sign in with a user name and password. So like most people you use your easy-to-guess birth date or write your passwords down in some easily accessible spot. It's not smart, but what's the alternative?

Password managers can help. They fill in your passwords automatically.

With a password manager, you only need to remember one password - albeit a strong one - that accesses the password manager.

Then, using the encrypted password, the program automatically and safely fills in login forms on every site it deems legitimate.

Recipe: Roasted Piri Piri Chicken

Serves 4

- 2-3 pound whole chicken
- Juice of 2 lemons, plus zest
- ¼ cup extra virgin olive oil
- 1 tablespoon chili powder or crushed chili, or to taste
- 2 teaspoons salt
- 1 clove garlic, crushed
- 1 piece of ginger, peeled and grated

Directions

Mix together all of the ingredients for the marinade and place chicken and marinade in a plastic bag and refrigerate.

Massage and turn frequently and marinate for at least two hours or preferably overnight.

Preheat the oven to 450° F. Place the chicken and marinade in a baking tray and roast for about an hour or until cooked through, basting occasionally during cooking.

Once cooked, remove from oven and rest for 15 minutes, reserving cooking juice.

Carve and serve with crusty bread, a green salad with olives and the piri-piri juice.
